Practical training in schools as part of the teacher training at the University of Flensburg

Practical training in schools is a central element of teacher training for all those types of schools which aim to develop professional and research-oriented decision making skills.

Practical training in schools

Practical training in schools is a central element of teacher training for all those types of schools which aim to develop professional and research-oriented decision making skills.

As part of the process of developing an occupational biography, school-based experiences allow for a review of skills and capabilities for the teaching profession that have been acquired up to the relevant stage of the study.

Practical training in schools offers:

Insights into the teaching profession including the general conditions and processes of change of the school as an institution.

The application and further development of the knowledge in terms of teaching methodology and educational sciences acquired at university

A reference to the skills and capabilities acquired in seminars in the context of practical vocational experience

A reflection of the University's curricula, taking into account practical requirements

Opportunities to develop and pursue research and development projects (e. g. the research task of the practical semester, thesis, PHD etc.)
