Description

Target Group:

The Grammar and Punctuation for Academic Writing course is an English for Academic Purposes course for students with a B1-C1 English level proficiency who want to focus on the grammar necessary for the effective writing of academic texts.

Content:

This is an instructor led graded self-study course. This means you have access to all the materials, including answer keys, and that an instructor oversees the structure and timing of activities, as well as answers any questions throughout the semester. The course begins with a review of verb tense use in an academic context before moving on to more complex structures like showing logical links, expressing, shades of meaning, and using relative clauses. Although useful outside academia, the grammar in this course is focused solely on the academic context.

Assessment:

Regular and active participation in the class. Completion of homework assignments. Klausur to be turned in on the last day of class.

Technology:

This course uses the learning management software moodle, and the online meetings software Webex. Further materials related to the book are available through the publisher's website.
