Admissions Notification, Acceptance, and Matriculation for Fall Semester 2019/2020

🔊 Listen

This page gives progressively updated information about the admissions notification procedure for EUF degree programs with restricted admission, as well as the corresponding deadlines for admissions acceptance and matriculation.

The admissions process for degree programs with restricted admission takes place in stages. After the application deadline has passed, letters of admission are emailed to all accepted applicants. Following this initial admission and notification round, new study places open up as some applicants decline the offered place. These are then offered to other applicants in successive admissions rounds, called "replacement rounds."

You can regularly check the first table below to find out when the letters of admission for your chosen degree program were sent out for each admissions round. If the word "scheduled" is missing from a cell, you know that the letters of admission for that degree program and round have already been sent out. If you have not received a letter of admission via email by the date of a specific round, you may still be admitted during the next round. Replacement rounds cease when all study places for a degree program have been given out.

A lottery-like selection procedure (Losverfahren) may be held if new study places become available (for example, through cancellations) after all of the replacement rounds have concluded. During this final admissions round, previously excluded applicants may gain admittance to their chosen degree program.

The second table gives the dates by which you must inform EUF that you intend to accept the offered place of study. You must send in this confirmation of acceptance via email. If your email has successfully gone through, you will immediately receive an automated email confirming receipt of your email. If you fail to formally accept your offered place of study by the date stated in the letter of admission you received via email, you irrevocably lose your right to the offered place of study and can no longer matriculate.

The third table lists the dates by which the Admissions Office must receive all of the required documents for your enrollment in the study program for which you have been accepted. Once again, if the Admissions Office does not receive these documents by the stated deadline, you will irrevocably lose your offered place in the study program.
