About this resource

Who is this resource for?

The CD ROM is intended for researchers and practitioners. It contains many papers and practical tools. We do not expect that many people will wish to read it from end to end. Instead it is designed as a practical resource.

How can it be used?

There will be many papers of interest to researchers in his field. We also hope that the tools contained ion the CD will be of practical use to practitioners. Different language versions

Nearly all the papers and tools are available in English. Wherever possible, we have also attempted to provide the tools in the language in which they were developed. In some cases, the research papers are also available in national languages.

Finding your way around

There are different ways to navigate the CD ROM. One way is simply to browse the different file in your media browser – Windows Explorer or OS X Finder. We have attempted to provide a reasonably transparent folder structure with files arranged by country and according to type (research and tools) and according to language.

Alternatively, you may follow the hyperlink structure. In this case we have divided the Resources into a number of different sections and have attempted to provide an introduction to each section. The sections are explained below. Follow the hyperlinks to access each to the sections.

Background to the project

This section provides an introduction to the project explaining the underpinning ideas and the project activities.

Research

The introduction explains the research design and provides access to the research reports produced by the project partners.

Policy development

This section provides analysis of policy development and implementation for self evaluation in the different partner countries

Curricula and tools
