Name of module	Culture and International Development
Aim of the module (expected learning outcome and competencies to be acquired)	Familiarisation with cross-disciplinary approaches. Familiarisation with the context-defining purposes of historical studies and how these relate to their other subjects. Familiarisation with recent research and how mainstream viewpoints shift and academic debates are conducted.
Contents of the module	The module approaches international development from the perspective of socio-economic history. Classes offered within this module will have shifting titles and incrementally modified content. Regional specialisations (e.g. Europe, European sub-regions, Latin America, China, South Asia) may be offered from time to time within the framework of the module. These classes occasionally specialise very closely on the culture and development of China and/or India. Feedback from alumni indicates that the China and India classes provide a decisive competitive edge against other candidates when seeking challenging international assignments.
Study section	4. semester
Applicability	The course may also be opened for other bachelor programmes of the EUF.
