	Semester	2nd semester	Workload (total)		150 h
	Term	Every spring semester (spring term)	of which	Classroom hours	45 h
	Duration	1 semester		Self-study	105 h
Qualification objective		Students should be able to define, investigate and solve problems in the subject area; manage and process complex knowledge, critically assess theories and methods, make precise and consistent use of concepts and relevant terminology, present arguments based on tenable academic foundations, conduct an informed dialogue in the subject area, read relevant sources critically.
Expertise		The module helps students to develop a broad perspective on the history of human development against the background of which they can judge current development and predict future developments.
Methodological competence		A core focus is on the intertwinement of human development, environmental change, and social tragedy. We develop perspectives with which we can assess and contextualise risks to the planet as well as responses to these risks, seeing human development as an evolving set of entangled ecosystems, bounded, threatened, and threatening.
Social and personal skills		There is a strong focus on interactive, cooperative, argumentative, and dialogic learning.
