Course aim

Students develop the ability to reflect on regional geographic paradigms and learn how to apply them to a selected region. Starting from the German-Danish border region, they learn to analyse a European region under a geographical problem with different methods and using different data sources (statistics, texts, visual media) and to present their results in an address-oriented way.

- Ability to analyse spatial conflicts of use and interests by demonstrating the connections and interrelationships between socio-cultural, economic and ecological aspects on different scale levels.
- In-depth geographical knowledge of a selected European or non-European region
- Ability to critically reflect different approaches to regional geography (traditional and constructivist regional geography, regional geography, new regional geography)
- deepening of the competence to link natural, social, economic and cultural science approaches in a spatial way
- Development of intercultural competence through reflection on one's own perspective
- Development of problem solving competence in group situations
- Development of planning, organisational and communication skills

Seminar, excursion, elaboration and presentation of a regional geographical topic, project work, planning of an excursion day in group work, group discussion, excursion protocol
