Course aims and requirements		This module takes as its starting point the cultural-historical development of fashion as a social manifestation up to the 'total social phenomenon' in postmodernism. Students will be able to reconstruct the history of fashion development in a social context and analyse the contemporary development between uniformity and individuality within the framework of vestimental communication models. They learn psychological concepts of identity and discuss the phenomenon of 'fashion' in the tension between social and personal identity as the staging of the subject. Deepening of the knowledge of European and non-European costume history; ability to present and reflect on scientific fashion theories and identity concepts. Scientific research; structuring, editing and presenting the content of the subject; hypothesis formation and testing. Team management; personal and self-reflexive positioning within the framework of scientific questions of 'fashion and identity'.
