Module title	European Law
Qualification and expertise goals:	The initial aim of this module is to enable students to describe and elaborate on the main course contents allowing them to draw connections between the different topics in the field of EU law. Students will be able to summarise the most important decisions of the European Court of Justice, classify them from a dogmatic perspective and should be able to legally analyse exemplary facts toward relevant topics. This module will enable students to critically appreciate the current legislative and political scope of the EU and to evaluate future developmental steps of the EU - also within the historical dimension.

Module title	Institutional and Constitutional Economics
Qualification and expertise goals:	After successful completion of this module, students should be able to independently understand research contexts in the field of cultural and social embeddedness of economic processes. This will be facilitated by a substantial, and in selected areas, in-depth overview of the relevant research literature, whereby essential conceptual perspectives as well as their associated methodological and analytical tools will be acquired. Due to the strong inter-disciplinary base of the module, students will also acquire skills in the field of interdisciplinary dialogue (ability to change perspective, appreciation of the complementary strengths of approaches and ability to critically reflect on their own disciplinary position).
Content description:	The module provides a substantial, and in selected areas, an in-depth overview of relevant research literature on the economy's social and cultural embeddedness. Starting point is survey-like literature that meanwhile also exists in book format. This is notably deepened through the reading and discussion of original texts in the reading course accompanying the lecture. Both milestones of discussion as well as current contributions are discussed. A core component of this module are the interdisciplinary contexts, especially references to sociological debates.

Module title	Internal and external relations of the EU
Qualification and expertise goals:	This module succeeds the mandatory seminar "European Law and Politics", which among other issues deals with those EU policies that seek to realise the internal market. Based on selected areas of law, especially business law, students are taught to recognise the connection between the EU's internal policies and external relations. At the same time they will develop a deeper understanding of the differences in national, European and international legal systems and their correlation.

Module title	Europe in the Global Economy
Qualification and expertise goals:	After successfully completing the module, students should be able to independently work on research contexts in the field of international political economy. This is attained on the basis of an in-depth overview of selected research literature, whereby the central conceptual perspectives and their associated methodological and analytical tools will be learned. Due to the interdisciplinarity of the module, students acquire skills in the field of interdisciplinary dialogue (ability to change perspective and appreciation of the complementary strengths of approaches, ability to critically reflect on their own disciplinary position).
Content description:	The module provides a thorough and in-depth overview of selected research literature in the field of international political economy. This "interdiscipline" (David Lake) was established in the last decade at the intersection between economics and political science and is concerned with the interactions between international politics and international economics. This is an academic response to an increasingly globalized economy and politics. The focus is on international organisations, the organisation of globalised value adding chains and the impact of international economic relations on national politics. Relevant readings for the course are derived from textbooks and selected interdisciplinary references, especially between political science and economics, are a core component of the module.

Module title	European Governance
Qualification and expertise goals:	After the course "Institutions of the EU" students should be able to sketch the historical development of European integration, and be familiar with and able to apply theories of integration. They should be aware of the complexity of dynamics at play as well as the multiplicity of actors involved in policy-shaping and -making on EU level. Further, they should have an understanding of major policy areas and their supranational dimension. The seminar "European Governance" introduces the students to the academic debate on the nature of the European Union, its strengths and weaknesses. It qualifies students to engage in the analysis of the EU's organizational framework. Students should be able to take a critical standpoint towards the developments and the current outlook in order to make conclusions about its future development, necessary changes in structure and organization.
Content description:	The course "Institutions of the EU" introduces the topic by looking more concretely into the historical development of the European integration process from the second half of the twentieth century until today. It introduces students to the theoretical foundations which have served to explain the European integration process and highlights the major endogenous and exogenous forces and events that influenced its course. In a second step, European integration as an outcome will be treated more closely, shifting the focus away from "history-making events" towards the "day-to-day policy-making" in the EU. This gives students the chance to look at actors involved and the dynamics at play in agenda-setting, policy-shaping and -making as well as deepening and widening of European integration. Related theories will be thoroughly discussed. This part of the module will give students the chance to focus on different policy areas and their specific underlying dynamics. Equipped with a solid understanding of processes and outcomes as well as various theoretical perspectives, students will be looking more deeply into the current academic debate on the European Union during the seminar "European Governance". The EU's workings as well institutional and constitutional design will be analysed critically. Finally, the complex internal (member-states, regions) and external relations (global politics, world regions, European borders and border regions, enlargement) of the EU have to be considered in this context. "Weak points" will be identified and examined, such as the (real or pretended) democratic deficit, the lack of transparency as well as lack of legitimization and acknowledgement internally as well as internationally. Further, possible dimensions the process of integration might take will be discussed. Future prospects whereas means of improvement will also be an issue of concern.

Module title	European Ideas
Qualification and expertise goals:	Students will acquire knowledge about the history and development of European ideas, concepts and theories, particularly in the areas of politics and science. They will be able to classify current European political and legal debates historically and systematically and to critically evaluate them. They will reflect on the history of ideas and historical peculiarities of European politics and science. Students will understand the historical roots of European identity and, on based on this, will be able to analyse and classify current structure debates.
Content description:	The module introduces political, sociological, philosophical, religious and scientific concepts and theories that have emerged in Europe and have shaped Europe historically and conceptually. An introduction is given on the history of political and legal concepts and theories and the anthropological and education-philosophical concepts of the individual and the person. In addition, students become acquainted with the specific modern principles and methods of modern scientific thinking. Based on this, current debates about statehood, global constitutionalism, democracy, peace, law and justice, and individuality, monotheism and the role of science in Europe are perceived and discussed.

Module title	European Border Region Development
Qualification and expertise goals:	The aim of the course is for students to obtain knowledge about and insight into the issue of border regions in Europe from a political, socioeconomic, spatial and cultural perspective. Special emphasis will be put at analysing cross-border cooperation structures like the Euroregions that have become a key-area of activities of the EU.
Content description:	The course will introduce the institutions and funding-schemes related to cross-border cooperation, including INTERREG (Aim III), PHARE, TACIS, and CARDS. Cross-border cooperation will be analysed in practice from working with a number of case-studies. Cross-border cooperation policies will be related to traditional instruments of European Union regional policies and to general issues around the development of the EU. Here, the course builds on the students' knowledge from first-year-courses on European governance, regional policies, and regional development. The course focuses on developing competencies that allow students to understand and analyse the significance of key issues of cooperation in border regions, qualifying them to take part in the administration of and involvement in cross-border cooperation in border regions.

Module title	Concepts of Europe and Politics of the EU
Qualification and expertise goals:	This module allows students to deepen their knowledge in the field of sociology and philosophy. Students may take one, two or three courses in this area, depending on their personal preferences. Depending on the amount of courses chosen from this module, the concrete learning goals of this module vary from providing a mere introduction into the field to deepening the students' understanding on the sociological and philosophical dimensions of European Studies. Students shall learn to understand Europe in a broader political context of political development and global politics. They shall learn to analyse political processes in Europe as part of democratic institution building and the formation of democratic publics. Extending their political horizon and their sociological imagination. Learning theoretically and practically about interest enforcement in the EU. The learning process relates to the ability to conduct sound analysis, develop an action plan and go on to its realisation. This entails thorough preparation, strategic thinking, risk assessment, good argumentation, concise presentation and a practical feeling for ethics. They shall learn how to use the knowledge they have in a critical way. Therefore students shall learn again and again to decentre the European Perspective.
Content description:	In the centre of the module first are sociological and in particular problems of political science and theory. It includes philosophical, political, legal, historical, and geographical concepts of Europe – scholarly, literarily and everyday concepts. Classes can concentrate on the development of EU-Politics as well as going far back in history, because political and legal history of Europe today begins at several early beginnings (and not at one alone) which are reaching back to the Axe Times, or the emergence of canon law in the 12th century, or the French and American Revolution. Furthermore, Europe begins and is constituted not only in Europe and by Europe alone. Europe must not only be seen from an observer's position from abroad but its centrism should be decentered also internally. The interrelation of globalization and locality defines Europe and determines its politics since a long time. Organizational differentiation is another important aspect for the purpose of answering the complex question: How is "European" defined? Finally, politics and public are of the same origin, and this internal relation of politics and public will be critically reflected in EU politics and concepts of Europe. The interrelation of public conflict, contest, and a further democratization of Europe will also be subject to analysis. So the internal relations of public will formation, democracy, and conflict are a further point of focus.

Module title	External Relations of the EU
Qualification and expertise goals:	The module serves to deepen the knowledge in the field of "EU External Relations". The aim of the module is, first and foremost, that students can bring the various foreign policy issues into a conceptual association. They should become aware of the specific interaction of international and supranational organization mechanisms. Based on this, they should acquire the ability to critically assess the current EU external relations as well as to take further steps in critically evaluate the geopolitical importance of Europe and develop future prospects for the external relations of the EU.
Content description:	The contents of this module are related to three broad areas which are EU Foreign Policy and European Diplomacy, European Migration and Border policies and Europe and the world. This module offers a general look on the EU and its role in the world from variety of perspectives. This is one the one hand done by considering the EU Common Foreign and Security Policy in general, as well as by dealing with concrete cases, such as EU and G8/G 20, cooperation between EU and the United Nations in crisis management and EU's relations with Russia, China and the US. Moreover this module also deals with the question of the borders of the EU. On the one hand the legal framework for the management of the external borders and the agency "Frontex" are considered thus dealing with the questions of external borders of the EU. On the other hand, the issues related to the Schengen area and the internal borders of the EU are considered. 7.5

Module title	Methodological Skills / Statistical Methods
Qualification and expertise goals:	The aim of this module is to equip students with grounding in research methods, including appropriate statistical methods, to provide a broad understanding of the research process. Students will be able to read, understand, and critique published work, as well as being able to understand the important methodological issues for their own future research projects.
Content description:	The content of the module has two main strands, and combined this gives students a robust knowledge of the research process and some of the tools to undertake their own projects, and appraise published research. The first strand relates to the understanding and development of methodological skills. This will include discussion of research parameters, primary and secondary research, the role of secondary literature, and research philosophies. Within this, broad considerations of research design will be discussed. The statistical strand will support the first strand by equipping students with an understanding of how to generate, understand and interpret results. This will include descriptive statistics, covariance, correlation, commonly used statistical tests, and regression. With this statistical knowledge, students will learn how to think about generating their own results, and interpret results from published literature. The module will contain discussion of all of the stages of a research project from conception to completion, and will draw on academic research from different business, economics, and management areas of research as well as contemporary research methods texts, and should prepare the students well for other modules on their course where research is discussed and utilized.

Module title	Master Thesis and Colloquium
Qualification and expertise goals:	Master Thesis: Based on a central theme of the course, students should demonstrate the ability to produce independent scientific work to master the application of research methods in answering their research question. This will come across through the integration of models and theories from various disciplines belonging to the programme, as well as a thorough analysis and reflection on one's own topic. The Master's thesis should also demonstrate that the students are able to work within a set time frame, to solve a problem independently and using scientific methods, and to present the results in an adequate manner. In the defense students should display in the form of an oral presentation and a subsequent discussion, the main findings and hypotheses of the thesis. The duration of defense is usually one hour. Master Colloquium: During the Master's Colloquium students will present methodology and content of the subject of their own Master's thesis. This approach encourages critical reflection and the interchange among students. Independent, scientific work, the use of research methods and their application will be promoted. The Master's colloquium also helps students gaining an idea of working in academic fields. During the colloquium, students can also assess and compare the state of their own academic performance. Feedback helps to increase motivation and leads to a more productive analysis of the topic and encourage compliance with the time frame of the work. Furthermore, the competences acquired during the studies will be practised and applied to appropriate and continuing criticism. During the colloquium, students of a same year work together and help and encourage each other with discussions and ideas, both within and outside the conference. This encourages their founded analysis and the reflection on their own topic.
Content description:	The module provides a foundational and in selected areas an in-depth review of relevant research literature. The starting point is survey-like overview of the literature. On the one hand, milestones of the discussion and on the other hand recent contributions both come into play. Interdisciplinary references, especially for sociological debate, are a core component of the module.
